SUFFRAGAN BISHOP'S WAR RECORD

Rev. A. C. Acheson of Middleton Helped Put Down Riel's Second Rebellion—Showed Courage Under Fire—Was Student at University of Toronto—Has Accepted Election as Suffragan.

Announcement of his acceptance of the election to the office of suffragan bishop of the diocese of Connecticut was made on Monday by Rev. B. Campbell Acheson, rector of the Church of the Holy Trinity at Middletown.

The announcement follows:

Rev. B. C. Acheson has notified the bishop of Connecticut that he has accepted the election to the office of suffragan bishop of the diocese of Connecticut, subject to the approval of the house of bishops and the several ecclesiastical authorities he will accept his election to the office of bishop suffragan.

Rector For 23 Years.

Mr. Acheson's only rectorship has been at the church of the Holy Trinity, which he came in 1892, after serving one year as curate at All Saints' church of Toronto, Canada, and for three years as curate at St. George's church, New York city. Born in Woolwich, England, of his parents, he was reared in Ireland where he received his early education. He came to Canada in 1881 and for a time was in business, with the firm of George Golding and Sons, of Toronto.

Ordained in 1883.

He attended the University of Toronto, but left without completing his course, and entered Wycliffe college, a divinity school, from which he was graduated in 1888. He received an addendum to New York university, and took his master's degree there in 1892, while serving at St. George's. His ordination took place in 1883, immediately upon his graduation from Wycliffe. He was naturalized as an American citizen in 1894, after coming to live in Middletown.

One of Queen's Own.

That the suffragan bishop-elect has been a soldier as well as a clergyman is not so generally known as are the other principal facts of his career. While a student at the University of Toronto, he was a member of Company K, the university company of the Canadian regiment known as the Queen's Own Rifles. During his college course the company with the rest of this regiment was ordered to the territory of Saskatchewan, now the province of the same name, to help put down what was known as Riel's second rebellion, an uprising of several thousand Indians, led by Louis Riel, a French and Indian half-breed.

Marched 204 Miles.

The hardships and privations of the men of this regiment commenced long before they arrived at the scene of hostilities in the far west. This was before the completion of the Canadian Pacific railway, and consequently several hundred miles of the journey had to be accomplished on foot through the deep snow. The men slept in snowdrifts, lived on hardtack and salt pork and suffered greatly from the cold on account of insufficient clothing.

From a place called Swift Current, which was as near as trains could take them to their destination, the command of which young Acheson was a member, he was ordered to take a 204-mile march to Battleford, where nearly 600 men, women and children had been huddled into a stockade defended by a single company of the northwest mounted police. Not until they were detained at Swift Current did the young soldiers realize the nature of the task which awaited them.

It was found that indiscriminate ravages had been committed by the Indians in all the settlements along the line of march. Houses had been destroyed after being plundered, and all sorts of lawless acts had been committed. The Indians had even hauled a piano for several miles and left it in the woods.

Mr. Acheson still has a curious memento of this journey in the shape of two Greek books, one of them a pocket dictionary, and the other a book of hymns, which he found in the woods where the Indians had abandoned them.

Indians Prepared to Attack.

Before the relief column arrived at the stockade at Battleford, the Indians had gathered at a point on the Saskatchewan river, forty miles away.

CHAPLAIN OF

SPANISH WAR VETERANS.

George A. Turner Elected at State Encampment.

When the encampment of the Spanish War Veterans resumed its session in the state armory at New Haven on Saturday the committees named the day before made their reports and the delegates took up recommendation of officers and committees. Several resolutions were also reported in, and then came the election of officers.

The statistical report showed 910 members in local camps, an increase of 110.

Martin Laubscher of Rockville, was chosen department commander, Clifford H. Russell of Stamford, secretary, and Charles G. Morris of New Haven, junior vice commander.

Other officers are James Schiller, marshal; William J. Garland, New Haven, P. T. Barrett and C. Dietz, delegates to the national convention; M. H. Russell, A. Gassner, J. S. Dally and P. G. Cosgrove, alternates; James H. Morgan, Hartford, department inspector; Harold J. Hough, Norwalk, department surgeon; George A. Turner, Norwich, department chaplain.

After adjourning the delegates went to the shore for an outing.

OTIS LIBRARY NOTES.

Many have admired the beautiful orchids which have been in the library for the past few weeks, given by Jonathan Trumbull.

These include the showy orchids, the pink Lady's slipper or moccasin flower, the swamp orchid, the yellow lady's slipper, sometimes called whippoorwill's shoe.

"Rural Improvement" the principles of civic art applied to rural communities including village improvement and the betterment of the open country, by Frank A. Waugh, is a book just purchased by the library.

It is of interest to the grange members and all interested in out-door life.

The musical department is steadily growing. Gifts have been received of songs, books of voluntaries and marches for the organ, also a banjo instruction book.

Thirty visited the library reading room Sunday.

Torington.—Rev. O. W. Richardson, pastor of the Methodist church in Pleasant Valley, visited the town in the European war as he and his wife, who came from London to this country a good many years ago have for some time been relatives by the ties of the British army or navy.

away, prepared to attack the newly arrived troops with the aid of reinforcements, led by two chiefs named Poundmaker and Big Bear.

The Quebec Rifles formed a part of a column which was ordered to advance upon the Indians without waiting for them to attack. They marched all day and all night and very early in the morning took up a position surrounding the Indian force who had entrenched themselves strongly upon a hilltop, mostly surrounded by wooded country.

Private Acheson's Bravery.

The engagement began at 4 o'clock in the morning and lasted until noon, when the Indians saw the futility of further resistance and surrendered. Meeting there was a furious and bloody battle. About the middle of the morning a little squad of ten men, of whom Private Acheson was one, were sent into the thicket which was deemed a strategic position, and because they failed to hear an order for their recall remained there until almost the conclusion of the fighting. In the little thicket all lost their lives except three, Private Acheson, Dobbs and Lloyd.

While the three were at last emerging from the thicket to rejoin the rest of their command, Dobbs was wounded and fell. Private Acheson immediately ran to him, under fire, and carried him on his shoulder toward a place of safety. He had proceeded only a few yards however, when his foot was struck by a bullet and he fell. This time he was killed outright. Almost directly Lloyd, the other member of the trio, was also wounded, and Acheson was obliged to relinquish his lifeless burden and help Lloyd to a place of safety. For this exploit under fire he afterward received a medal from Queen Victoria. Private Lloyd is now Principal Lloyd of the manual training school in Toronto.

The capture of this band of Indians was only one other marauding band at large, and they were the mounted police. On the return soon afterwards taken prisoners by the soldiers were carried in flatboats 500 miles down the Saskatchewan river packed, as Mr. Acheson has described it in telling the story, "like herrings in a barrel." They reached the end of Lake Winnipeg in September, having been in service since February.

With Connecticut Militiamen.

The column numbered 5,000 men, and were under the command of General Otter, who later served in the Boer war. The other two columns engaged in suppressing this uprising were commanded, respectively, by General Strange and the Earl of Minto. It was a singular coincidence that in the battle described above, the individual referred to being Captain Acheson, was besides selling to the Canadian government, during the war, for which he was agent, had offered his own services as an officer. The same American officer again offered his services in South Africa, and was killed there.

The same regiment, the Queen's Own Rifles, with which Mr. Acheson fought, is now with the Canadian contingent in France.

At European War's Outbreak.

Mr. Acheson had another exciting experience when together with Professor Nicholson of Wesleyan university he was stranded in Italy among thousands of other tourists at the outbreak of the present war. It was not until the two Middletown men were members of the committee appointed by Ambassador Thomas Nelson Page to relieve the distress of American tourists and arrange for their safe transportation back to the United States.

They served both at Rome and at Naples in this capacity, and a dredge on the San Guglielmo, one of the three emigrant ships which brought Americans home. On the ship, Mr. Acheson acted as interpreter for the passengers in arranging with the ship's officer for their satisfactory disposal, while his colleague looked after the necessary guarantee of passage money.
